Top worry for Oregonians: affording healthcare

The COUNTRY Financial Security Index® survey asked “what are your financial concerns?”

BLOOMINGTON, IL (March 29, 2017) – Financial fears come in many forms. According to a new survey, for Oregon residents, the cost of medical care is at the top of the list.

The COUNTRY Financial® Security Index survey asked Americans about their financial present and future. Survey respondents revealed their concerns over financial security topics including health care costs, retirement savings and affording a child’s tuition.

For Oregon’s respondents, the most common concern was being able to afford healthcare costs. Forty-six percent of respondents said healthcare expenses were the top worry. That concern was paired with a fear of unexpected expenses (45 percent).

“No one wants a disruption in their financial house,” said COUNTRY Financial Agency Vice President Tim Harris. “Rising health care costs, a depleted ‘emergency fund,’ or an unplanned delay in retirement are just some of the concerns that might be looming in the background. On the bright side, taking an assessment of your financial fears can help in planning for those concerns.”

Some of the uncertainty respondents expressed may have been prompted by the latest headlines. Seventy-three percent of Oregonians agreed with the statement “current events are making me concerned about my financial future.”

On the topic of unexpected expenses, the survey found women in Oregon significantly more concerned about surprise bills than men (54 percent to 36 percent). The statewide numbers also show that unexpected expenses are the biggest concerns for Millennials and GenXers (50 percent and 43 percent), while for Baby Boomers the biggest concern is the cost of healthcare (59 percent).
