Retirement Dilemma: Over Half in Oregon Aren't Saving for It and a Third Fear Ability to Retire

35% of Oregonians worry their retirement is in jeopardy

BLOOMINGTON, IL – May 15, 2017 – Oregonians report they are worried about affording retirement, but over half say they aren't saving money to retire.

The latest COUNTRY Financial Security Index® survey revealed that two in three Oregonians (73 percent) report the country's current events are making them concerned about their financial future. Given this backdrop, it may not come as a surprise the Oregon survey also found over a third (35 percent) worry they either will not be able to retire or will need to delay retirement in the future.

Despite this sentiment, fewer than half of those surveyed (45 percent) include retirement in their long-term financial goals. This finding is further supported by the Economic Policy Institute's (EPI) *The State of American Retirement*¹ report, which finds "nearly half of families have no retirement savings accounts at all."

The lack of retirement savings could in part be due to prioritizing short-term financial considerations. Oregonians report their top financial concerns are affording healthcare costs (46 percent), unexpected expenses (45 percent), and taking desired vacations (40 percent).

"Many people today are outliving their assets because they did not include retirement in their long-term financial goals," said Doyle Williams, an executive vice president at COUNTRY Financial. "Americans need to seek financial guidance now so they can eliminate the fear of never being able to retire. By taking some simple steps almost everyone can put a plan in place to secure their financial future."

With advancements in healthcare, it is not uncommon for people to spend more years in retirement than previous generations. For planning purposes, a good rule of thumb is to assume living to about age 90 unless health or family history indicate otherwise. Moreover, the desired standard of living during retirement will influence how much money you will need. It is advised that you plan on at least 75 percent of your pre-retirement income to pay for living expenses during retirement.

About The COUNTRY Financial Security Index®

Since 2007, the COUNTRY Financial Security Index has measured Americans' sentiments of their personal financial security. The Index also delves deeper into individual personal finance topics to better inform Americans about the issues impacting their finances. Survey data, videos and analysis are available at www.countryfinancial.com/newsroom and on Twitter at @helloCOUNTRY.
